After achieving 49% revenue growth and welcoming 800 new customers in 2024, Gearset has opened a new UK headquarters in Cambridge

15.09.25, Cambridge: Gearset, the leading DevOps platform for Salesforce, today announced the opening of its new flagship office in the Cambridge Science Park. Following another year of significant growth in 2024, the new headquarters sees Gearset stay in Cambridge and remain an integral part of Silicon Fen - Europe's most successful tech cluster. The new office supports a growing number of remote employees, reflecting its flexible approach to working.

The opening of Gearset's new UK headquarters follows a year of record-breaking business milestones for the company. In 2024, Gearset experienced a 49% year-over-year revenue increase, welcoming 800 new customers, and bringing the total customer count to 3500, including 1,000 Enterprise clients. It acquired Clayton to strengthen its DevOps suite with cutting-edge code reviews for Salesforce. Gearset also expanded its global workforce with a 50% headcount increase across all business segments, growing its team in its existing offices in Belfast, Chicago, as well as Cambridge.

The new office space fits this trajectory and provides a flexible environment that accommodates the expected growth in Gearset's headcount into 2025-26. Gearset's new headquarters is 16,000 sq ft, almost double the size of its previous office space. A defining feature is the single open-plan floor that's designed to support cross-team collaboration. Each department will have its own neighbourhood for departmental collaboration, but there will also be spaces designed for cross-team collaboration as well as areas for individual focus work. While Gearset is committed to providing flexible working arrangements, its new office will also ensure it can continue nurturing top talent from renowned institutions like Cambridge University.

Kevin Boyle, CEO and Co-Founder at Gearset, commented, "Our new headquarters is where we will continue on our journey of setting the standard for Salesforce DevOps and building products customers love. The strength of Gearset's company culture, and the level of cross-company collaboration is key to our success. Our new office will ensure we have the right environment to foster even greater collaboration and open communication as we embark upon our next phase of growth."

Gearset's new HQ builds on a year of momentum, and is a strategic investment in the company and team's future. Gearset plans to expand its global workforce, so it can continue driving innovation from its Belfast, Cambridge and Chicago offices.
